GlobalMobileVision.com: BBC World confirms business connection with GMV

Last night I sent the e-mail text, below, to the BBC World customer relations department, and also to Euronews, basically to find out if there was any business relationship between these media organisations and GlobalMobileVision.com.

I did receive a reply to confirm. Below is the text:

Hello,

“...I am investigating possibly business relationship between BBC World and a company, based in Dublin, named Global Mobile Vision.

GMV have a BBC World Image on their site “<http://www.globalmobilevision.com/index.htm>” located here “http://www.globalmobilevision.com/images/bbc_uronews.gif” along with an image of Euronews, another reputable news organisation.

GMV have been involved in some allegations (not paying staff, alleged sexual harrassment, violations of health and safety regulations) intimidaton and bullying of staff, and with-holding payment from staff.

I would like to ask the question is this alleged business relationship a reality or a lie. There is no business relationship explicitly mentioned, but I believe that it is inferred, but the location of the BBC image on their website.

Already a large media interest is taking place in Ireland, and I would like to clear up the ambiguity over this issue.

I urge you to read more about this issue in the following webpages:

This morning I receive this reply:

Hello and thank you for your email.

BBC World has an agreement in which Global Mobile Vision supplies the channel to Mobilkom mobile phone subscribers in Austria. This has been in operation for five months and is one of several such contracts that BBC World has with telecoms companies around the globe. We would not comment on any specific allegations about Global Mobile Vision.

Thank you for taking the trouble to write to us.

With regards

I have as of yet to receive a reply from Euronews.

The Village Magazine will be running an investigative article this week on the story.

The lead story in The Village happens to be about Global Mobile Vision. Are they planning another article as follow-up?

Hi Bernie,

Yes the Village plan to do a follow up article this week with more investigative information.
